Religion, Media, and Modern Religiosity

The Second James C. Suggs Seminar on Christian Communications

Stewart Hoover

Professor of Media Studies and Religious Studies,
 University of Colorado, Boulder

Religion and media intermingle and collide in the cultural experience of our modern lives transforming our religiosity. This seminar explores the broader implications of the cross-fertilization of media and religion as well as the fundamental questions of how people, as media consumers and media audiences, access, interact with, and make sense of mediated religion.

Stewart M. Hoover directs the Center for Media, Religion, and Culture at the University of Colorado, Boulder. His research interests center on media audience and reception studies rooted in cultural studies, anthropology and qualitative sociology, concentrating on studies of media and religion.
